Not illustrated. 1603 Excerpt: ... be great secrets in nature, which the skilfull physitions and naturall philosophers do find out. As the hanging of some thing about the necke, may have force to drive away an ague, the wearing of something may have such vertu to deliver from the cramp, and such like. And from these Satandoeth take occasion to bring in his trumperies and curious devises. As because there be secrets in nature, a ring is curiouslie framed according to the signes in the firmament, this is tied to a thread, and let downe into a basin or cup of water, and wil show great things. Because there be secrets in nature, a horshoo must be heat red hot, and then put into a kettle seething upon the fire to drive away the witches spirit. Also he that hath his cattle bewitched, burneth some live thing, as hogge or henne, to drive out the divell. Can these naturall thinges expell devils? Nay, they play the rancke witches, which burne anything for to expell devils: for hath God taught to doe anie such thing? Doe they burne the thing to God, or is it as a verie burnt sacrifice to the devill? In the time of the law burnt sacrifices were ofired to God: the devill among the heathen drewe the like to himself: And now by his sleight he doth after some sort procure the same at their hands, which professe to be Christians, and thus worshipping him, he ceaseth from hurting their bodies, or their cattell, as gaining a greater matter. M. B. If it be so (as I am not able to gainsay it), then be there multitudes in all places which are guiltie of sorcerie and witchcraft. For I see many deale in matters by the helpe and power of the devill, which are perswaded otherwise. But I mervaile much at divers things touching the helpe which men have by devils. Let us conferre a little about them. The devill doeth k...
