

Being God

Seventeen-year-old Malik Kaplan is the bully of Farrington High School. Malik has a cross to bear, or maybe its a Star of David; being the black teenaged son of a Catholic mother and Jewish father frequently makes life confusing. His grandfather, uncle, and older brother all ruled as the chief badass at Farrington. Only his father is a forgotten Kaplan, and seems disinterested in his only surviving son. Malik is determined to be the worst of the worst and not repeat his fathers mistake of being invisible; even if his actions cost him the esteem of the people he cares about. At least he can drink. Alcohol keeps him going; alcohol is destroying his life. But he doesnt see any problem, not even after he finds himself in court, shouldering the blame for someone elses crime. Suddenly hes faced with court-ordered community service shepherding an angry ten-year-old who hates the world, an offer he cant refuse from the boys gang leader brother, and an opponent he cant crush: Barney, a fourteen-year-old girl who watched her alcoholic father abuse and murder her mother. She wants nothing to do with any bad boy, especially not one who thinks drinking is the way to forget his sins. Malik and Barney are forced to work together to help the kid and themselves escape the pull of the gang, and to rediscover the real meaning of family and friendship.
