Crown 8vo, Cloth, 6s. Fully I Illustrated. THERE are few to whom the lines, John Brown sbody lies a-mould ring in the grave, But his souls marching on, are not familiar, but few are now aware that they came into being as the marching song, made and used by the followers of John Brown of Harper s Ferry, or of Ossawatomie, after he had been executed. His was a stirring life. Having conceived the idea of becoming the liberator of the negro slaves in the Southern States of North A merica, he emigrated in 1855 from Ohio to Kansas, where he took an active part in the contest against the pro-slavery party. He gained, in August 1856, a victory at Ossawatomie over a superior number of Missounans who had invaded Kansas (whence the surname Ossawatomie). On the night of October 16, 1859, he seized the arsenal at Harper s Ferry, Virginia, at the head of a small band of followers with a view to arming the negroes and inciting an insurrection. He was captured October 18th, was tried by the Commonwealth of Virginia, and was executed at Charlestown, December 2, 1859. able source Brown.
