

BORDERLANDS: a child

A series of poems translated from the French and originally called RIVERAINS un enfant, written and illustrated by contemporary French author and artist DAN LAY. Ian Crockatt's translations capture the quirky, faux-naive feel of the originals, which have the sharpness and innocence of a child's viewpoint combined with a sense of mystery and the surreal. They cross and re-cross the borders between childhood and adulthood, full of surprises and fresh insights, accessible and with a dream-like clarity, touched by sunshine but also awareness of darkness behind the light. Here is how Dan Lay introduces them: Thought is nomadic. From the heart of the house of childhood to the frontiers of improbable countries thought is possessed by adventure. Insatiable, she revisits past centuries, makes notes daily like the scribe seated at his table beside the Pharaonic way. She climbs to the limits of belief, from there reveals times yet to come. Intoxicated, thought entices us to jump ravines, to risk leaps from which there is no return. It is good then to murmur a tempo to her, a measure which enables her to step as poetry into this world.
