Baby Girl sees the future from the womb, and its clear the Fifties hold more for her than Elvis Presley and life in a tumble-down trailer. From the start, Baby Girl believes shes beautiful and special because her beautiful and special Momma tells her so. The two are close as crossed fingers and its a good thing, because Baby Girls Sight never warns her what her treacherous father will do next. She and Momma must flee into the night. In the distant town of Cot, each contributes to the family fortune with her own gift Momma at the sewing machine, Baby Girl predicting futures. In the peace of that summer, Baby Girls confidence grows robust as her sturdy little figure. Its quite a shock, that first day of high school, when the kids dont find her as adorable as Momma does. Her confidence shrinks down to the size of a Lifesaver until she finds ways to make her differences work for her. An accordion, a quirky new friendship, and a romance with the same boy her enemy-cheerleader is after, return Baby Girl to her feisty best. But nothing can prepare her for the final nightmare the one that can forever end her magical, hard-knock journey toward growing up.
