In connection with the fertilizer works is prepared blood albumen which, up to six years ago, had been imported entirely from Europe. It was claimed it could not be made in this country; the climate would not permit, etc. This product is used by the calico printers in fixing certain pigment colors, such as ultramarine, to the cloth on which they are printed. Blood albumen is similar to that in the white of an egg, and when the temperature is raised to a certain point it coagulates. A paste ink is made by mixing liquid albumen with the pigment, and this ink is used in printing the cloths. After these are printed, they are run into a room and steamed at a temperature approximating two hundred degrees. This action coagulates the albumen in the ink, rendering it insoluble in water, and mechanically fixes the color in the cloth. In addition to this, albumen is used by the tanner in finishing leathers; by the makers of certain extracts, and by sugar manufacturers for the clarifying of liquors. Dried blood is used as a fertilizer, and is also beginning to be used quite largely as a stock food. It is the most concentrated food we have, containing something like eighty-seven per cent. of protein, and gives exceptionally good results when fed to horses and other live stock in connection with their regular feed. The Kansas City experiment station has discovered that a disease known as scours, which greatly troubles young calves, can be cured by the addition of a little of this dried blood in the skim milk on which they are fed. This discovery is saving thousands of calves every year. Certain portions of tankage are
