

One Nation Under God: A Christian Argument in Favor of Separation of Church and State

We read about it and hear about it in the news: Prayer has been taken from our public schools. The Ten Commandments have been stripped from courthouse walls. The Pledge of Allegiance and the National Motto have been called into question. There is little doubt that religion in America is under attack. What is not clear is how Christians in America should respond to that attack. The push against religion in the public sphere has been met with a forceful push back from some Christians, but others feel lost in the middle of this tug-of-war. Many are confused about the current issues, how the courts resolve these issues, and even the history of our country and the meaning of our Constitution. What was the true intent of our founding fathers when they penned the two Religion Clauses of the First Amendment to the Constitution? What can we learn from the Supreme Courts interpretation of those clauses? Should we be fighting for America to be a Christian nation? Are we pleasing God, or offending him, when we try to maintain a national religious identity which is more custom and ritual than substance? Are we trying to preserve a moral society in America for Gods sake, or for our own?
