

A Practical Enquiry Into the Philosophy of Education (Classic Reprint)

The Author of the following pages is a plain man? who has endeavoured to write a plain book, for the purpose of being popularly useful. The philosophical form which his enquiries have assumed, is the result rather of accidental circumstances than of free choice. The strong desire which he felt in his earlier years to benefit the Young, induced him to push forward in the paths which appeared to him most likely to lead to his object; and it was not till he had advanced far into the fields of philosophy, that he first began dimly to perceive the importance of the ground which he had unwittingly occupied. The truth is, that he had laboured many years in the Sabbath Schools with which he had connected himself, before he was aware that? in his combat with ignorance? he was wielding weapons that were comparatively new ;and it was still longer, before he very clearly understood the principles of those Exercises which he found so successful.
