

The Making of a Heretic: How the World Out There Ruined a Good Catholic Boy

What happens when people ask way too many questions of way too many wizards and gurus, and then spend way too much time thinking about the answers? What if they turn over rocks and are bitten by lizards they didn't even know existed? What if they eventually dare to examine and challenge creeds and dogmas they have been led to believe are sacrosanct? That's how heretics are made. Can Big Religion ever be reconciled with science, democracy and the modern world? Can conventional religion catch up, reform itself and make peace with the unavoidable diversity that surrounds it? Can clerics in those institutions begin honestly to acknowledge the crimes of their past and embark on a plan to live in harmony with the children of their victims? The very personal stories in this book provide some insights into those kinds of questions that, hopefully, the reader can build upon and improve with their own thoughts and from their own life experiences.
