

Work of the Massachusetts Volunteer Aid Association: During the War With Spain, 1898 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Work of the Massachusetts Volunteer Aid Association: During the War With Spain, 1898

In time of war there is always a need of some voluntary organization of citizens to assist the government. However carefully planned the military provisions may be for the care of the sick and wounded, a severe battle or an epidemic of disease makes such extraordinary demands that the government cannot meet them. This has been demonstrated in every modern war. Then, when the soldier is discharged from the service for disability, a patriotic people will not permit him to be treated as an incompetent or pauper. To prevent this, assistance other than that which the usual charitable associations can furnish is essential. In Massachusetts there is never a lack of patriotic spirit among her men and women when the government is assailed and the lives and rights of its citizens are at hazard. All that is necessary is to centralize and direct this willing force. After the plans are matured and the lines of relief work defined, there has never been any difficulty in this State in securing for the government able and generous assistance. But unless some wise and general plan is conceived at the beginning there is a great waste of energy and means and a liability that more harm than good may be done. No voluntary work of citizens can be of much service without the hearty co-operation of the regularly constituted military authorities.
